

Marine Cleaning Requires Smart Equipment Choices

by Steel Eagle, www.SteelEagle.com

Marine cleaning may very well be one of the most diverse areas of the contract cleaning business. Cruise ships pretty much have all the needs of a small city, with cleaning jobs ranging from waste disposal to maintaining heavy equipment, food service cleaning, and surface cleaning. Maintaining docks and port areas, and many other specialty jobs are also needed. After thinking about all these things, don't forget to factor in that these jobs will be complicated by some of the most difficult environmental obstacles – salt, humidity, access/portability and EPA regulations.

Having the equipment and know-how to offer many different kinds of services will place you above your competition. You also want to promote efficiency – both for your customers' satisfaction and your labor costs.

So what do you need to be prepared to say “YES” to any request made by these customers? Have the specialty tools needed to do the job.

Where should you start?

Self-contained Vacuum and Pressure Washing Systems. With marine cleaning, portability is key. Being able to trailer mount or boat mount your cleaning system is a must. You also need your system to be both durable and powerful.

Another consideration is the need to capture wastewater. Many circumstances demand (either by law or location) capturing and removing wastewater created by the cleaning process. These washing systems do just that.

There are other things to think about, and they are things we considered when developing our Fury System. Some things you may want to consider is choosing a system, such as Fury, that has the following features:

- Powder coated steel frames and cabinets to protect from the harshest conditions.
- A range of top quality powerful engines (gas or diesel) by Honda, Kohler and Isuzu.
- Large capacity fuel tanks for longer run jobs that are further out.

- Belt driven vacuum blowers.
- The capability of capture tools up to 24".
- Capture hose lengths up to 600' for even the most access challenging jobs.
- Quality hose reels.
- Vacuum tools, for both horizontal and vertical cleaning.

The most important thing is to make sure the system you choose is the system and accessories that will fit you best. Give us a call and explain your particular set of needs and we will build you a system that is suited just for you.

We understand your time is important and you need the correct product for your application. Take a minute to discuss your particular cleaning situations with your Steel Eagle salesperson. They can recommend the perfect system utilizing the correct accessories for the job. No matter what you are cleaning, Steel Eagle has a system that will do the job with ease and speed.
